In Scripture Today

Second Sunday in Lent

Lent is the time for the renewal of our baptismal covenant: last week we heard of God's covenant with Noah and the animals, today of God's covenant with Abraham and Sarah. By faith we join in this covenant, which calls us to follow Christ to the cross and into the resurrection.

Mark 8:31-38

The gospel promises that following in the way of Christ offers life. During Lent, many Christians place limits on their lives—"fasting from self-indulgence" (ELW, p. 254)—as a sign of incorporation into Christ. We need to beware of counseling those who are suffering more than we are about willingly taking up their cross, by which Mark meant religious persecution.

Genesis 17:1-7, 15-16

The story of God's covenant with Abraham and Sarah is read this Sunday to strengthen the Lenten focus on covenant and to present examples of those who receive life from God. That the passage speaks of God's everlasting covenant with the descendants of Abraham reminds Christians of God's continuing faithfulness also to Jews and Muslims.

Romans 4:13-25

In Lent we receive the grace of God, which like the surprise of a birth to a couple in old age, comes from the mercy of God rather than from our human efforts.
